

The Six problems

Dementia affects many people in the aging population of the current day. Mental health is very difficult to help and takes much time and patience.

Paralysis can change lives and much support is needed for both the paralysed and those close to them.

Clean water for everybody is probably the most immediate of all of the problems and is definitely one that will need to be addressed soon.

Antibiotics is a huge problem for the future- we overprescribe it all the time and bacteria is constantly finding ways of fighting back.

For environmentalists, aeroplane fumes will be the most pressing concern because many of the ecosystems of the world are being affected.

Every human on this planet needs to eat to survive and many die of famine every year. Food is the second most immediate- after water.
